

Cybersecurity & Risk Management

Data is the new currency of crime, and companies have a fiduciary responsibility to their customers, shareholders and employees to develop a cybersecurity posture that prevents an attack and mitigates its impact, if one does occur.

Mitigating cybersecurity threats requires a tailored approach that achieves an ongoing balance between the numerous threat “vectors” as they evolve and the cost to deploy an effective program that protects your company’s information assets. It also requires a holistic approach across the entire cybersecurity spectrum, including prevention, detection, response and recovery.

The goal of an effective cybersecurity program is to reduce risk to an acceptable level. In many companies, that means compliance with applicable security standards such as the Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard (PCI DSS), HITRUST/HIPAA or ISO 27001. Now, more than ever, it is essential to build a cyber fortress around your organization.

There are two types of companies – those that have been hacked and those that don’t yet know they have been hacked. What steps is your organization taking to secure your most valuable data assets?
